Josh Driver

Keynote speaker on practical AI, workplace giving and civic tech

Josh is the founder and CEO of Selflessly, a workplace giving and volunteering platform built on a simple idea: doing good at work should be easy. In 2026 he rebuilt the company around AI agents that now handle much of the day to day, a story covered by the Indianapolis Business Journal and CICP. He speaks with candor and humor, and audiences leave with things they can do Monday morning.

Signature talks

I Rebuilt My Company Around an AI Agent: What Actually Works

The honest field report: what broke, what surprised us, and the guardrails that make AI safe to trust. For leaders deciding what AI should and shouldn't run.

AI for the Rest of Us: Small Teams, Real Guardrails

The playbook for organizations without an AI department: find where AI fits, start without betting the business, and build trust one boring task at a time.

Giving That Sticks: Employee Giving Programs People Actually Use

Why most workplace giving programs fade by spring, and how small and midsize employers build matching, volunteering and giving that employees join and finance can live with.

Government That Works Like an App: Lessons From Civic Tech

From in.gov to Indiana's Management Performance Hub to the Know the O Facts opioid campaign: what makes public technology land, and what leaders can borrow from startups without breaking public trust.

ADHD, AI, and the Art of Staying Out of Your Own Way

Designing systems around how your brain actually works, productivity without shame, and why the future of work might fit neurodivergent minds better than the past did.

What audiences get

Real stories from running a company with AI, four rules for adopting it responsibly, and practical steps tailored to the room, whether that is HR and workforce leaders, founders, nonprofits or public sector teams.
